Learning Style Thoughts

I believe that learning styles are a good starting off point to learn how you take in information best. It's important to know how you learn best, which is why it makes sense that people put a lot of thought into the different types of learning styles, but I don't think that it's a perfect measure of learning. Nobody's brain works in mostly one way. Your brain uses so many different inputs just to function, period, but especially when it comes to absorbing information. So it doesn't make sense to put so much effort into one basket. If that makes sense. For me, I know that I take in information using a combination of methods. None of them are perfect and foolproof though.
